1. OptiBand's Targeted Audience

In order to select the most efficient modes of communication about the project, as well as ensuring the maximum penetration of such messages and thus the highest possible impact, the relevant target groups which constitute OptiBand's audience had been identified.

The activities were tailored to the relevant target audience identified, in an effort to optimise the impact reached. The identified groups of interest consist of organisations, commercial companies and individuals who either have an interest or may be affected by the OptiBand project.

Three levels of target groups are listed below:

1.1 Primary target group

The primary target group is the main group within the audience targeted by OptiBand. The major part of the dissemination efforts had been directed to this group, in which the scientific, economic and social impact in terms of potential collaboration, future exploitation and societal implications – is expected to be the highest. It was by mapping the needs and interests of this target group, building upon the activities accomplished under “T.1.1: Stakeholders Requirements Collection”, as well as by understanding the most efficient methods to reach it, that OptiBand's impact was and will be in its optimal form.

The OptiBand Primary Target Audience Group is identified as comprised of:

- Clients of the OptiBand's consortium, which are mainly telecom operators, who operate or intend to operate an IPTV network.
- Players in the IPTV ecosystem, which are IPTV equipment developers and providers, such as head-end vendors, encryptor vendors, VOD service providers and so forth.

1.2 Secondary target group

The OptiBand Secondary Target Audience Group comprises of actors affected or influenced by the results of the OptiBand project. Complementing the primary target group, this group includes:

- Relevant researchers, academics, standardisation bodies, industry experts or influencers (members of the professional Press, for example) and organisations engaged in the use and development of video distribution services in general, and IPTV / Internet-TV (OTT) at the various National, European and Global levels.
- OptiBand's industrial members' manufacturing partners, which are DSLAM providers and network transport equipment vendors.

1.3 Tertiary target group

The main part of the scientific, economic and societal impact strategy targets stakeholders having an impact in planning or achieving some R&D activity, hence the general Public at large is not identified as a direct group of interest. Nevertheless, this group, and its leading opinion shapers (in the Media, etc.) is also affected by the OptiBand results, as the main end-users will be members of the general public. Therefore, even though no focused dissemination actions have been aiming for this group, widely targeted activities such as the public website have also reached these groups. Besides, the general dissemination material generated by the project (the project's leaflets, posters and website), were made so as to fit the experience and understanding of a general public, and to raise public awareness of the potential benefits brought by the OptiBand consortium to the IPTV and Internet-TV experience.

2. OptiBand's Societal Implications

OptiBand-enhanced IPTV and Internet TV deployment and service provisioning in the developed countries will accelerate the on-going trends of variety and richness of choice offered to the media consumer wherever and whenever they choose to consume the media on one hand and operator consolidation on the other hand. This stems from the economic benefits that those OptiBand-enhanced services' business models will yield, in comparison with state-of-the-art conventional TV and IPTV/OTT distribution.

Furthermore, OptiBand-enhanced IPTV deployment and service provisioning in developing regions will accelerate overcoming the formidable challenges faced today by providers of traditional and contemporary TV services. Typical ICT environment in these regions is characterised by low broadband penetration, lack of infrastructure, low per capita income and difficult regulatory climates¹. The main challenge in developing countries is therefore to develop an efficient and high impact IPTV deployment model which can be sustained in such an environment. Such model has to be better aligned with the target market, affordability, and rapid technology adoption. The OptiBand enhancement technologies are indeed the kind of enabler or catalyst agent, able to help accelerate the change and make it happen across multiple devices and media types.

Analysing the expected horizontal societal implications of IPTV and Internet-TV in general and of the OptiBand-enhanced TV distribution technologies in particular, we may generalise that the optimisation, cost reduction and backwards-compatible deployment made possible by OptiBand, will complement patterns of behaviour in five domains: 1) media access inequality (the "digital divide"); 2) community reach and social change; 3) political participation (the "Facebook revolutions"); 4) cultural diversity and cultural participation; and 5) evolution of governments, organisations and economic institutions.

Improved Media access provides viewers access to arts, music, health education, religion, new technology and a wide spectrum of information. Such technology is a venue for inspiration and enrichment and it also allows the viewer to become engaged in issues that have personal and societal implications. Viewers are able to witness everything from presidential debates, to Olympic Games, to wars being fought right in front of them. They discover ways to renovate their homes, look like runway models, remotely vote in-person for up-and-coming artists, and give their hearts to favourite causes, all in one afternoon. The potential for individual (democratised "YouTube"-type media production) and societal transformation is incredible, as a big chunk of life is captivated by distributed Media.

At the same time modern Media diffusion phenomena, such as reality TV and targeted advertising, convey or inspire recognised adverse outcomes including violence, gender-bias, language deterioration and distorted reality. They can also easily increase the visibility of negative role models. Part-and-parcel of the impact of the accelerated trends towards ubiquitous media access, contributed to by the OptiBand innovations, call for societal and individual responsibility and to educate the Public to exercise proper caution and a balanced judgement of the messengers' possible motivations, when analysing diffused information.
