

Figure 1. A cell infected with the GFP11-tagged influenza virus. Viral polymerase and ribonucleoproteins produce fluorescence (shown in greyscale), visible in the cell nucleus (large uniformly bright area) and as spots in the cytoplasm. The designed virus enables for the first time to track (colored lines) the influenza ribonucleoproteins in live infected cells.