Project description

Understanding the intellectual history of the eastern Mediterranean

One of the longest-lasting dynasties in history, the Ottoman Empire controlled much of south-east Europe, western Asia, and northern Africa between the 14th and early 20th centuries. It disintegrated in World War I but had slowly declined prior to this. The EU-funded SIHAFA project will analyse the late Ottoman (between the 1890s and 1918) Arabic ideosphere of the eastern Mediterranean through its periodical press. To do this, the project will examine seven Arabic journals from Baghdad, Beirut, Cairo and Damascus, amongst other key actions. SIHAFA's work will lead to the mapping of discursive fields of authors and texts through computational approaches and the publishing of groundbreaking research in English and Arabic.
