Project description

Giving a historical voice to the silenced

History is multivocal. Unfortunately, preserving historical memory results in a particular reading of history. It’s important to deconstruct the hegemonic historical discourse and include different narratives from the perspective of otherness. The EU-funded REWIND project will study the construction of discourses around European cultural heritage, focusing on travel literature written by Latin American women from... the early 20th century. As such, non-European women, who committed to feminist movements and miscegenation, become historical agents and cultural mediators that counteract a Eurocentric and patriarchal historical discourse. Using an interdisciplinary methodology based on geospatial tools and corpus linguistic analysis combined with gender decolonial approaches, REWIND aims to protect and transfer a cultural legacy that reflects the memories and subjectivities of a diverse society.
