Project description

National institutions and European policies on irregular migrants

European countries tend to cluster around various types of labour markets and welfare states, and these different "institutional models" are associated with different economic and social outcomes for citizens and migrants. The EU-funded PRIME project will study how variations in national institutions, and the interests with which they are associated, shape the rights and conditions of irregular migrants in law, policy and practice across EU Member States. PRIME will carry out large-scale surveys, structured policy analysis and qualitative interviews with migrants, employers, policy actors, interest groups and voters in eight European countries. The findings will generate new understandings of the role and effects of institutional variations in shaping outcomes for migrants and citizens, which is critical for more effective national and EU policy-making.
