Project description

Land restitution in the context of Myanmar’s transition to democracy

The return of property following regime changes in war-ravaged countries offers a key opportunity to address historical injustices. But while it aims to reconcile differences, it also creates debate over material distribution and political inclusion in the nation’s future. The EU-funded Giving Land Back project investigates land restitution in Myanmar, a formerly authoritarian, predominantly agrarian nation currently undergoing a rapid, public and bumpy transition towards democracy. Building on five years of research on land reform in the country, the project will examine how the new government’s efforts to return land are taking shape and what these processes mean for the nation’s future.
