Project description

How grassroot initiatives merge parts of participatory and deliberative democracies

Gaps between political decision-making processes and citizens are increasingly visible in Europe. Furthermore, a lack of faith in political processes has fuelled populist sentiment and strengthened autocratic governance in some cases. However, rather than interpret the pluralistic nature of democracy as a weakness, local governments and new urban movements are influencing political cultures, pushing for greater accountability and inclusiveness. The EU-funded project EUARENAS investigates the impact of these local reform initiatives. Through comparative case studies and governance innovation pilots EUARENAS will generate contextually sensitive insights and good practices for more inclusive forms of governance and citizen participation. It will also develop a toolbox for participatory and deliberative governance.
